

A.S.P.I.R.E. to do your very best.

Midterms are here!

Good study habits start with knowing your learning style.

How you learn best can affect how you study or even where you study. The study environment is just as important as a student's learning style.

For example, if you are someone who is easily distracted, then studying in a room where you have direct access to the television, ipod, cell phone, or computer is not a good place to maintain or even harness good study habits. The library or the dining room table may be a better environment.

Now for others having background noise is a plus. But you have to know which is best for you.

In addition, knowing your learning style can help you study better. Are you a tactile learner? Visual learner? Auditory learner? Depending on your learning style, you may need to tweak the manner in which you study.

So be proactive, get to know your learning style, and make this the best academic year you have ever had.

Remember to A.S.P.I.R.E.

A—Have the right attitude

S— Study everyday, not just the night before the test

P— Be proactive about your grades, look at the grade book on a weekly basis (at least twice a week)

I— Inquire from your teachers about concepts that you did not understand when reading the chapter or form a study group

R— Reflect on what you need to do before you are in danger of failing a class
